

Things Called Art

Artworks in various media by members of The Artists Voice Inc

The Artist's Voice is a group of Adelaide Hills and Fleurieu professional artists who share resources, ideas and enthusiasm, and raise awareness of local art within the community.

The exhibition features a variety of artwork, including painting, drawing, photography, sculpture and printmaking.

All members of the Artist's Voice are trained artists who are committed to professionalism. They pride themselves on being able to mount strong coherent exhibitions with great diversity.

Since their establishment in 1997 the group has had a close relationship with the Hahndorf Academy where they have leased the top gallery and mounted several exhibitions per year as well as group and solo exhibitions throughout South Australia.

This program has allowed The Artist's Voice to fulfil an aim of providing a contact point for emerging and established artists, as well as access to visitors and local people.

Each member has a track record of art education, and exhibitions apart from those mounted by the Artists' Voice Inc.

Their lists of attributes include various awards, public and private commissions, as well as representation in collections and funded work with community based arts projects.

Some members fall into the New Media category of work via their experiments and creation of works using computer technology. Apart from works on paper, board and canvas, media used by members are ceramics, wood and metal, fabric, fused glass, printmaking, found materials and dyes.

The American journalist Pro Bronson wrote "There is nothing more genuine than breaking away from the chorus to learn the sound of your own voice."

Such is the philosophy of the Artist's Voice. The members share knowledge, ideas, creativity and celebrate each other's individuality.

As a group they encourage each other to expand their, and the viewer's, understanding of what art is through art-making.
